"Give the Papers the News," Says E. C. Allen

"It is not enough for a live community that advertising should be correctly used to stimulate business and to promote general prosperity. The home newspaper is a social and intellectual thing as well as a medium of business.

"One cannot serve the community better than by seeing that interesting items get to the editor. The editor is no mind reader; call him up and tell him. To do so is the neighborly thing, the kindly thing—a courtesy not to the published alone but to everyone in the district who might be interested in your little item."

Whenever Eric W. Allen, head of the department of journalism at the University of Oregon, speaks in a town, he urges the citizens to get behind the home paper in both a business and a news way on the ground that the newspaper can be made a wonderful agency for building up a community.

By a "successful community" Mr. Allen means not merely the community whose business men are prospering, and whose laborers are all at work, but the community that is a real social and intellectual center. He looks to the home paper as the most powerful means within reach of bringing about this kind of "success."

"If you can once get all your people into the way of voluntarily pouring these interesting scraps of news into the paper, you will add immensely to the general friendliness of the community," says Mr. Allen. "You will be helping to make your town the kind of a place where people want to stay and to which former residents will want to come back."

"So try and get ideas into the paper. Write a little for it once in a while. Don't let the editor do all the thinking for the town. If you publish ideas, you start others to thinking, and you raise by just so much the general level of intelligence.

"Encourage the home paper to be a business, social and intellectual center of the community. It will richly repay."

Sidney Ayres, who for two years was leading man with the Baker Stock Co. in Portland is in a thrilling two reel western feature of his own writing at the Orpheus theater this evening, which received much comment when it appeared last night.

Brown and White in vaudeville tickled some of the audience, and the rest of the bill is a western story of real human heart interest, and a side-splitting joker, with Max Asher in one of his Teutonic screams.

They are collecting clothing, and other necessities for the men in the field.

NEW MANAGER ASSUMED CHARGE

WELL KNOWN LOCAL LAD WILL GUIDE THE DESTINIES OF THE KLAMATH FALLS STEAM LAUNDRY IN THE FUTURE

D. B. Campbell has retired from the Klamath Falls Steam Laundry, and turned the business management of the institution over to Clarence Molschenbacher.

With this move in view, about a year ago Mr. Campbell engaged T. H. Morrow, one of the best known practical laundrymen on the Coast, to take charge of the plant and instruct "his boys" in the business. Last week Mr. Morrow returned to San Francisco, satisfied that his work was completed, and Mr. Campbell gracefully stepped down and out, and "the boys" are now in charge.

These boys are Joe Myerscough, who will have charge of the washing; J. Seeds, who will have the starching under his supervision, and Clarence Molschenbacher, in charge of the "front office."

And it is a nice plant the young men have. One of the improved machines that the institution boasts of is a "sock darning." While some claim that this machine is an added incentive to bachelorhood, others insist that in this age of "new womanhood," it but restores a long lost art. However that may be, the "sock darning" finds lots of friends among the hall roomers.

Another machine that will be in operation this week is what is called the "collar machine." This preventative of cussing is an instrument that opens the collar of the dressy man in such a manner that the adjustment of a necktie becomes a pleasure, instead of the most dreaded morning's task.

Taken altogether, the plant is one of the most complete in Oregon, and is equipped to handle the laundry work of a city many times the size of Klamath Falls.
